Dr. Rory A. Marshall is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at Michigan Medicine and a practicing paramedic with British Columbia Emergency Health Services. Across his career, he has worked in diverse frontline and leadership roles with BCEHS, Alberta Health Services, the Belize Emergency Response Team, and Hato Hone St John. His research focuses on the intersection of paramedicine, intimate partner violence (IPV), and brain injury, with an emphasis on improving survivor-centered care, education, policy, and inter-agency collaboration. Dr. Marshall's work has contributed to some of the first empirical studies examining how paramedics recognize, respond to, and support patients experiencing IPV, helping advance the role of paramedicine within public health and violence prevention initiatives.
